Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: Maybe your advice has helped lots of people, but that answer you gave "Yale '62" was terrible. A young man who has seen his 19th birthday and has never kissed a girl is a rare jewel these days. You told him he needs professional help. In my opinion he deserves a handshake and a pat on the back. And his dear mother deserves a medal.

The trouble with teen-agers today is they have no respect for the things that once were held sacred. If all the boys in the United States were like Yale '62, Ann Landers, we could close every home for unwed mothers—and wouldn't that be wonderful? — HOPPING MAD MOTHER.

Dear Mom: If all the boys in the United States were like Yale '62, we could close everything because there wouldn't be any people.

Apparently you write better than you read, Mother. The boy clearly stated that he yearns to express affection for the girl he's been dating several months, but he's paralyzed by fear and guilt. All he can think of when he's with his sweetheart is his mother's admonitions that he must never "defile" a girl or ruin her reputation.

Unless such a fellow gets help he'll be a prisoner of his inhibitions forever. Marriage and family is not in the picture for one whose concept of human relations is so warped. He's not a model of virtue, Mother. He's sick.

In Love for First Time

Dear Ann Landers: I'm a woman 44, and believe it or not, I've fallen in love for the first time. I'm too old to make a foolish mistake. Please help me.

I was the eldest of a large family. Father was a drinking man and I devoted my life to helping Mom raise the kids. She needed every spare dime so I worked and put thoughts of marriage out of my mind. Now they're all married but me.

I work in a diet kitchen of a hospital. The man has been a patient here for five months. He's a fairly well-to-do farmer (retired) with grown children. He'll be discharged in about three weeks and wants to marry me in September.

My closest friend says I'd be a fool to marry a man who has diabetes and only one leg. She says he's only looking for a free nurse. She's been divorced three times and claims she knows all about men first hand. Is she right?—ERMA.

Dear Erma: Take advice from a winner—not a loser. This woman reminds me of the horse-players. The "authorities" who try to tell everyone how to bet haven't got a dime themselves.

If you love this man say "yes." It's your divorcee friend who hasn't a leg to stand on.

A Freckle-Faced Runt

Dear Ann Landers: I am 11 years old and in the seventh grade. My problem is a red-headed, freckle-faced runt who follows me around school all day long. He waits at the door and walks home with me every afternoon even though he lives in the opposite direction.

He gave me a mushy valentine which I hated and now he has started to write love notes during class which I am very embarrassed over. He goes around telling everyone I'm his girl and I think he is the most horrible person in the entire seventh grade. What can I do about him?—NANCY.

Dear Nancy: There's nothing worse than a freckle-faced, red-headed pest who writes love notes in the seventh grade.

Be patient and let the boy grow up. He may come in very handy in about six years.

Confidential to A.Z.T.: According to you, those who read this column "enjoy eavesdropping and window-peeping," and they are "curiously sadistic." This naturally applies to everyone but YOU. You are a "student of human nature" and wish to "observe sociological trends." Thanks, Dad. I've heard this one before.

A LOVELIER YOU

AMERICAN CLASSICS. Fashions come and go, but the shirtwaist dress goes on forever. In fact, it has been so well liked and so much worn by American women over the years, it has become known as an American classic.

Other styles can also be included in the classic category. Definitely in are tailored slacks and shirts, twin sweaters, boxy suits, sleevless sheaths and full-skirted cocktail dresses.

Generally wearable and suited to a relaxed way of life, all the classics have come to be considered as staple, bread-and-butter wardrobe items. But this summer they are slated to become the main dish. The switch is due to popular demand. You girls asked for it. Let's hope you'll be happy with it and that the casual air of the classics will not lull you into a casual attitude.

When worn as a steady diet, classics require special treatment to set them off. A shirtwaist dress, for example, gets to look like a uniform, unless accessorized with clever touches. Classics also require the best from a wearer in the way of grooming, posture and underpinnings. Or they will not set her off!

Waibel-Marshall

Heirloom Gems Worn by Bride

Wearing an heirloom pearl and diamond lavaliere belonging to her grandmother, Miss Peggy-Lou Marshall exchanged rings with Mr. Alois Waibel in a ceremony at St. Matthias' Church recently.

Miss Marshall is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Marshall, 958 Victoria Avenue, and her groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Leo Waibel of Waldstetten, Germany.

GUARD OF HONOR

Members of the Victoria "Kickers" soccer team formed a guard of honor for their teammate and his bride as they left the church.

The Rev. Angus Cameron performed the ceremony for which the bride chose white nylon over taffeta embroidered with pale pink flowers. A chapel-length veil was caught to a Queen Anne headdress of mother of pearl sequins. She carried a white prayer book covered with pink roses and white carnations with trailing streamers caught with rosebuds.

ONLY ATTENDANT

Her only attendant was Miss Sheila Olson in a gown of electric blue taffeta. She carried sweetheart roses and carnations.

Mr. Peter Corry was best man with Mr. Barry Philbrook proposing the bridal toast.

For travelling to California and Mexico, Mrs. Waibel chose a grey wool dress with a blue floral hat and matching accessories.
